Weekly Commodore Update

Gulf Coast State College

Week of October 29-November 5

NEW YORK TIMES & GORE

NEW YORK TIMES

William C. Rhoden

Gore, whose role on the Royals is to create havoc on the basepaths, had just achieved two milestones: He had appeared in his first World Series game and had scored his first Series run.

“It feels pretty good,” Gore, 23, said as he dressed. “It’s amazing, actually.”

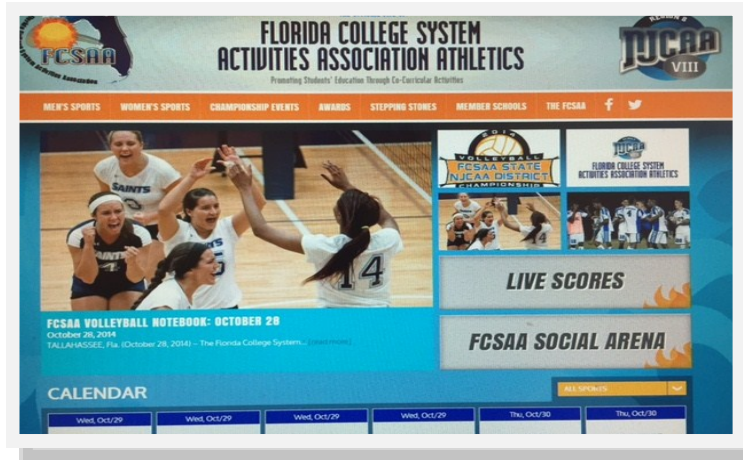

Gore’s big moment in Game 2 came in the bottom of the sixth inning after Billy Butler singled to give the Royals a 3-2 lead.

Gore, one of the fastest runners in baseball, replaced Butler. The two have become something of a tandem, with Gore often being sent into the game to pinch-run for Butler, the bulky designated hitter who outweighs the 165-pound Gore by about 80 pounds.

So Gore was on first base. Down at second was Hosmer. After they both advanced on a wild pitch, they came around to score on a double by Salvador Perez. As they crossed home plate, Hosmer looked back at Gore and said, “Good
